FARM RELIEF BILL PASSED BY SENATE

GOES TO HOUSE CLUTTERED UP WITH MANY AMENDMENTS

Belief Is That President Coolidge Will Veto Measure—Political Bartering Noted Within Both Parties—West and South Combine To Pass McNary-Naugen Law—Chamber Reverses Vote of Eight Months Ago—Senators Willis and Fess Both Against It.

The McNary-Naugen farm relief bill, laden at the last moment with amendments that threaten to complicate further its administration if it becomes a law, was passed by the senate late Friday afternoon by a vote of 47 to 39.

After a six year fight to write such a measure into law, the proponents of this legislation at last have a bill headed toward the White House for executive approval or rejection.

Less than eight months ago, virtually the same senate that voted Friday rejected a similar measure by a vote of 45 to 39.

The reversal of that action Friday was preceded by a series of political maneuvers along both national and sectional lines, trading among various groups seeking benefits from whatever legislation was to be enacted, legislative log rolling and debate on the merits of the bill.

The fight now centers in the house where similar tactics are expected to insure a majority for the bill. The house likewise voted down a similar bill in the preceding session.

Because of the short time before adjournment, house managers of the bill are expected to substitute the senate bill as amended, for its companion measure now pending there. Otherwise, differences might arise in conference which would delay the final passage before adjournment.

Belief is stronger than ever in congressional circles that President Coolidge will veto the bill, although he has taken no one into his confidence, so far as is known.

The bill as passed by the senate contains all the features which were objectionable to the president a year ago.

The limitations imposed upon his selections of persons to serve on the board established by the bill to carry out its provisions is sufficient in itself to warrant an executive veto, to say nothing of the merits of other features embodied in the legislation, according to the views of many members of congress.

The addition of cotton, rice and tobacco to the list of basic commodities which are to benefit under the provisions of the bill won recruits among the senators representing states in which these products are grown abundantly.

Senators from the cotton-growing states lost their fight to have the equalization fee on cotton deferred for two years, causing several of them to desert the ranks of the bill's supporters on the final vote, but others were held in line by the adoption of the amendment which provided for the insurance against price fluctuation of all the basic commodities listed in the bill.

A combination of southern and western senators, representing both political parties, constituted the majority which voted for the bill. New England and the east voted almost solidly against it, a notable exception being Senator Arthur R. Gould, of Maine, Republican, against whom a contest is pending. A strong minority from the southern states likewise opposed the bill on its final passage.

Opponents of the bill endeavored in vain either to emasculate the bill or to make it unworkable in a series of amendments offered after the debate had been closed, but they encountered a stone wall defense every time they made a move.

Unable to prevent the inclusion of the equalization fee provision in the bill, its opponents endeavored unsuccessfully to make it unattractive to its supporters by amendments providing first that it should be deferred on all basic commodities for two years, and later for one year.

They joined one group of the bill's supporters however, in voting down the amendment by Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, Democrat, to defer the equalization fee on cotton for two years, which was defeated overwhelmingly by a vote of 69 to 17. Senator Harrison and several of his associates in the fight thereupon went over to the opposition and voted against the bill.

Amendments offered by Senator Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee, on behalf of Senator Furnifold M. Simmons, of North Carolina, all of which were adopted, further encumbered the administrative machinery of the proposed law and also made the application of the equalization fee provision more difficult of operation.

Senators Willis and Fess voted against the bill.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Men come and go
And most of them are forgotten.
To have been an emperor of Rome
Or a king of England
Or a president of the United States, will not insure remembrance.

A few names give evidence of permanency, and among these few are Lincoln.

We thought we knew Lincoln long years ago, but we are finding that such is not the case.

His life, too, has been buried in legend, and the painstaking historian is kept busy sifting truth from fiction.

But gradually the mists are clearing and the massive form of the Savior of the Union steps forth.

We know more about Lincoln today than was known at any previous day.

And our knowledge will increase with the years.

Enough time has elapsed since his death to give assurance that he will continue to grow in esteem.

MILLIONAIRE BOOTLEGGER IS BEING TRIED

Canton—The end of the first week of the trial of Ben Rudner, millionaire bootlegger, charged with the reprisal murder of Don R. Mellett, crusading editor, found the structure of the prosecution's case complete.

The frame work of the evidence by which the state hopes to take Rudner's life in the electric chair to avenge the slaying of the young editor who warred on vice was virtually the same as that which convicted Pat McDermott last December.

Steve Kascholk, the main witness of the prosecution linked Rudner with Mellett when he charged that the millionaire had hired him to kill the editor.

Hugo's Notion of Genius

What! No critics? No. No. No. No. You explain everything? Yes. Genius is an entity like nature, and, like it, must be accepted purely and simply. A mountain is a thing to take or leave. . . . In genius every thing has its reason for existing. It is because it is. Its shadow is the reverse of its clarity, existing. It is because it is. Its precipice is the condition of its height.—Victor Hugo.

Master of Arts

Why the scholastic degree of "Master of Arts" is sometimes written "M. A." and other times "A. M." arose from the fact that the degree was originally indicated in Latin and in that language the position of words is not so essential to the sense as it is in English. In Latin it was either "Artium Magister" or "Magister Artium," meaning "master of arts."

Ewe Flock Produces the Best Lambs.

"The feed supplied to ewes during the pregnant and nursing period has a direct influence upon the flock returns for the year. Strong, vigorous lambs cannot be expected from ewes at yearning time, nor can the ewes be expected to furnish sufficient milk to promote maximum growth in their offspring if their ration is inferior as to kind and quality of feed or if an insufficient amount is allowed."

These statements by D. S. Bell, assistant in animal industry, are based on the results of a test made under his direction at the Ohio Experiment Station. In this test one lot of C-type Merino ewes were maintained until lambing time, February and March, on a ration of roughage only, consisting of heavy mixed clover hay and corn silage. After lambing, these ewes were allowed about three-fourths pound of a balanced grain mixture in addition to the roughage. They raised 78 per cent of the lambs born.

In another lot ewes of similar type and breeding received the same kind of roughage, but in addition were fed one-half pound of the grain mixture during the last six weeks of pregnancy. The grain was increased to one and one-fourth pounds after lambing. These ewes raised 90 per cent of their lambs.

The better fed ewes not only raised a larger percentage of the lambs yearned, but the lambs from this group averaged one-half pound heavier at birth and nearly five pounds heavier at weaning.

Private Gas Well

E. C. Hamilton, who lives east of Independence, Mo., has earned a name as a resourceful fellow. He decided that a gas well would be a handy thing to have about his yard, so he went about 50 feet from his house and dug one. His well, which has a pressure of 475 pounds, has been cased and the gas is piped to Hamilton's house, being used for heating, cooking and lighting.

OVER 1000 OHIO

TEACHERS RETIRE

A Teacher's Average Length of Service is Between 30 and 35 Years.

Columbus, Feb. 10.—More than a thousand Ohio school teachers who have been retired during the six years the State Teachers' Retirement System has been in operation have realized $4,666,467.60 from their original investment of 4 per cent of their salaries.

The retirement system, as it is operated by the state, is in effect a savings bank for teachers. Each teacher pays into the fund 4 per cent of his salary each month, and receives it back with interest when age makes it impossible to continue teaching. If a teacher quits the profession and withdraws, his or her deposits are paid promptly with interest. Retirement allowances are paid in monthly checks, based on a percentage of the salary received by the teacher when active.

Twelve hundred and sixty-seven teachers have been retired during a half dozen years, 743 of them women, and 524 men, at an average of 64 years and 9 months. They had taught on an average 36 years and 9 months before retiring, drawing an average annual salary of $1,104.85 during the 10 years preceding retirement. Their retirement allowances average $50.07 per month. Up to August 31, 1926, 111 had died. During 1926, 201 were retired, 123 women and 78 men.

A teacher's average length of service is between 30 and 35 years. Some retired teachers in the State have upwards of 60 years service to their credit. Indications that teachers' salaries have increased recently may be found in the fact that the average salary, before retirement, of the 201 teachers retired in 1926 was $1,311.90 as compared to a little more than $1,100 annual average for the six-year period.

Most of the women retired from city schools, and most of the men from country schools. There were 41 retirements from institutional schools.

WOMAN, 101,

GIVES PIPE CREDIT

FOR LONGEVITY

Lancaster, Feb. 10.—"By the grace of God, and my old clay pipe, I have lived to be 101," was the statement made today by Mrs. Nancy Gamble, Fairfield County's oldest citizen, and the oldest civil war widow in Ohio.

Mrs. Gamble has spent her entire life here and her early playmates were Indian children.

She has smoked her pipe since youth. The diet prescribed by her for longevity consists of corn pone, mush and milk.

Mrs. Gamble has never ridden on a train or in an automobile, and never has seen a movie, but she would rather live in the present day, "because things are more comfortable and modern dress and bobbed hair are more sensible."

The centenarian reads without glasses and her hearing is almost perfect. She favors prohibition, but is not opposed to smoking.

Keeping Silage From Freezing Is Easy

First Thing to Do Is to Keep Silo Tight.

Many farmers who have trouble with silage freezing blame the trouble on the type of silo, but careful observers believe that there is no noticeable difference among silos as to freezing and that the trouble is due largely to the way the silo and silage are managed. How can freezing be prevented?

First of all, the silo must be kept tight, so that the air above the silage will act as a sort of insulation. The silo roof must be tight, the windows kept closed, the silo doors put back in place as the silage is fed down, only one or two doors being left open at the top of the silage, and these openings must be kept closed with heavy blankets or rugs or sacks of straw which can be pulled into place when leaving the silo. A cover over the bottom of the chute will also help.

Then the silage must be handled properly. It should be kept higher in the center and should be broken loose from the wall down two or three inches at the close of each feeding period. Two or three heavy rugs or blankets spread over the silage, especially around the walls, will help a great deal in preventing freezing from one period to the next. Any small amount of frozen silage pulled loose from the wall should be put at the center of the silo and covered with a rag or carpet or tarpaulin, and the natural heat from the silage will usually thaw it out before the next feeding period. It should be remembered that the large body of silage has quite a lot of heat and that freezing from the walls is not very deep or very severe so long as this heat is kept from escaping upward.

Artificial Light and Heat Good for Fowls

Artificial heat is the latest modern addition to poultry management that may prove successful. Authorities say practical poultrymen have kept up egg production during cold snaps by taking the chill off the air and preventing the drinking water from freezing.

Without lights the hens can only put in about half the time they have in the summer to consume feed. Artificial lighting methods have broken the long periods of idleness from darkness to daylight. Given more working hours, the hen has responded with a larger egg production for the year. The increase is obtained during the winter season when eggs are least plentiful.

An all-mash method of feeding poultry has been reported favorably. The dry feeds are all crushed or ground and mixed in proper proportions and fed in a hopper to which the hens have access.

Well Grown Pullets Are Best for Eggs in Winter

Winter egg production is largely obtained from the pullets that are well grown, properly fed and carrying a surplus of flesh. Old hens that have produced eggs for one laying year normally rest during the winter and start laying in February and March, advises D. C. Henderson, extension poultry specialist at South Dakota state college.

Mr. Henderson advises keeping a flock consisting of two-thirds pullets and one-third hens. The pullets should be forced for winter egg production through liberal mash feeding. The old hens should be allowed to rest during the winter and kept for the production of hatching eggs next spring.

Dormant Spray for Cherries

Sour cherries will not often require a dormant spray, but if needed the spray recommended for peaches may be used. The sprays are applied as follows, using lime-sulphur 1½ to 50 or bordeaux 3-4-50 plus one pound of arsenate of lead: Make the first spray just before the cherry trees bloom, the second when the shucks are dropping from the young fruit, and a third spray following the second in about two weeks. To control cherry leaf spot, about two additional sprays should be applied after harvest. The interval between them should be about three weeks.

New Japanese Pest

Indications of an entirely new American pest in New York and New Jersey have been received by the United States Department of Agriculture. The species is a scarab or beetle of Japanese origin, and is the third scarab that has been introduced from Japan. It is suggested that entomologists be on the lookout for it. Unlike the other two species which have been introduced, it is not of striking appearance. It is a small, brown scarab which superficially resembles a number of the species of the genus Serica.

Select Vigorous Males

In selecting males to be retained as breeders, vigor should be one of the primary considerations. The vigor of the male, as well as the female, will be reflected in the hatchability of the eggs and the livability of the chicks. Although early maturity should be sought for in the heavier breeds, it should not be emphasized to the detriment of size. Males which mature exceptionally early may be undersized individuals and not desirable for breeding.

SCIENTIST SAYS AMAZONS WERE MEN WITHOUT BEARDS

Declares Greeks Mistook Sex of Ancient Warriors on Account of Their Shaven Faces.

Philadelphia.—The centuries-old legend about the Amazons, a nation of female warriors who carried fire and sword to ancient Greece, Asia Minor, Arabia, Syria and Egypt, was declared a myth by Dr. J. L. Myres, secretary of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, who was here recently attending the meetings of the American association.

The Amazons, according to Doctor Myres, were not women at all but men who had shaved and consequently looked like women to the bearded Greeks, who first gave them a place in history.

Professor Myres declares careful study of recent archeological evidence clears up the mystery of the Amazons. Their shaven appearance, he adds, either led their foes to believe them women, or they were called women in contempt for the effeminacy of their appearance.

Archeologists, said Doctor Myres, have found representations of beardless men in the Hittite monuments on a plateau near the headwaters of the Sagarius river, the modern Sakaria, in Asia Minor. By deciphering the Hittite language it has been learned that these men actually participated in the wars against the Greeks when the Amazon legend originated.

At about 1250 B. C. the fashion for beardless men among the Hittites suddenly ended, the monuments show, Doctor Myres believes the Hittites decided a succession of defeats by bearded warriors of other nations was due to the fact that their faces were shaven and they decided to let their whiskers grow.

"Louis XVI Gelatined," Schoolboy's Answer

London. — "Denmark is washed by the Catty Cat and the Scraggy Hack," wrote a despairing English boy at a geography examination. Other gems embalmed in the examination papers included:

"The highest peaks in the alps is the Blanc Mange."

"Amongst the islands of the West Indies are the Pyjamas, noted for toilet sponges."

"Ceylon is joined to India by a chain of coral wreaths."

"A focus is a thing like a mushroom, but if you eat it you will feel differently from a mushroom, for focuses is poison."

"Habeas Corpus is what the people use to say to the undertakers at the time of the great plague of London. It means, 'You may have the body.'"

"Louis XVI was gelatined during the French revolution."

"Chaplets are small places of worship."

Wesley Great Horseman

The most redoubtable horseman of the Eighteenth century was John Wesley. All through his active life he rode from 60 to 70 miles a day; after he was eighty years of age his record for a year was from 4,000 to 5,000 miles. Often he was in the saddle by 3 a. m., and, when weather permitted, it was his custom to ride with loose rein, reading history the while.

Of Ancient Origin

Some authorities believe the origin of the term "Pig and Whistle" as applied to coffee houses to be a corruption of "Peg and Wassail." "Peg" is from the low German "pegel," meaning a measure of liquid capacity, such as was marked by pegs in a "peg tankard." "Wassail" is an old expression of good wishes, also the liquor used for drinking health.

THE "POLITICAL RELIGION" OF AMERICA.

On January 27, 1837, just 90 years ago, Abraham Lincoln addressed the Young Men's Lyceum, at Springfield, Illinois, during which he outlined the "political religion" of America in the following language:

"Let every American, lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution, never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and Laws let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor, let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty.

Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in the schools, in seminaries and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling-books and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice and in short, let it become the political religion of the nation, and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay of all our sexes and tongues and colors and conditions, sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars."

Beauty and Charm in House Built of Wood

A defense of the frame house has been called from organizations of lumbermen to refute the charges made by the advocates of other building materials.

The tendency to belittle the permanency of wood construction has been intensified by recent announcements of successful experiments in the use of fabricated materials, such as steel. However, about 85 per cent of all dwelling houses in the United States are built mainly of lumber and three out of every four erected at the present time are lumber, according to an estimate of the association.

It is stated no material exposed without protection from the elements will last forever. Wood decays, steel rusts, marble disintegrates and wears away. Wood under ordinary conditions of use and exposure outlasts the life of man, even of several generations of men. All that wood as building material requires is that it shall be treated with preservative if in contact with the earth and painted when exposed to the weather. When so treated wood equals in permanency and surpasses in beauty, warmth and comfort any other building material.

The Written Word

By H. IRVING KING

CHARLOTTE ACKERMAN was quite disturbed when she wrote that letter. She had imagined herself in love with William Conover and she had fancied that William was in love with her. And because she had fancied herself in love, she now told herself, she had parted with the young man's idiosyncrasies to an extent that she now felt humiliated in recalling. William's last outrage upon her feelings had been his positive refusal to take her to a dance at the country club which she had set her heart upon attending. "We are not fitted for each other," she mused. "I should have realized that before. This is not the first time he has refused to escort me to some place to which I wanted to go upon his old pretext of business."

So she sat down and wrote him a letter, a rather long and very emphatic letter, "giving him the door," as William himself would have expressed it. Having sealed and directed the momentous epistle she gave it to her young brother, Johnnie, to post.

Having done this she cried until her eyes were red—not at having given William his walking papers—she told herself she had no regrets on that score—but because she had ever been such a fool as to imagine herself in love with him. That evening she displayed an artificial gaiety; that night she did not sleep well and the next morning she told herself she had been hasty—had been a little too severe upon William, after all. By noon she told herself that if William, in answer to her letter, wrote a sufficiently humble and apologetic missive she would forgive him.

As soon as William received the letter he would, without doubt, sit right down and answer it. The answer ought to be in that afternoon's mail. But that afternoon's mail was a blank as far as Charlotte was concerned. As she sat moping in her room, hating herself and the world generally, there came a call for her on the telephone. It was William calling her up; William cheery and bright.

"That you, Charlotte?" he said.

"Yes," replied Charlotte with a dignity of the consistency of frozen pudding.

"Well," went on the young man in a light and happy voice, "I shan't have to attend to that business matter I spoke of on Wednesday; I'll take you to the dance all right tomorrow night. There now, does that make you feel more agreeable? Come, come, thaw out a little and let's be friends again. Be sure and be ready when I come for you. Goodbye, darling."

Charlotte sat astounded. That was the way he took the blow, was it? Passed off that letter of hers as a trifle! Well, it had brought him to his senses, anyhow, with regard to the dance. But—! From having been plunged in the depth because she had written that letter she was now raised to a pitch of anger that its recipient had regarded it as of so little importance. "But," she thought after a while, "I was unreasonable—very. If he doesn't mention that nasty letter, I won't."

Meanwhile Master Johnnie Ackerman, aged sixteen, was confronting a problem of his own. There was a floral garden on the Ackerman place and some garden seats in it—a retired spot favorable for meditation; and Johnnie sat on one of those garden seats meditating. In his hands he held a letter at which he gazed with a puzzled expression. "Gee," thought Johnnie, "there's that letter to Bill Conover Lottie gave me to mail and I couldn't find when I got to the post office. It was in my inside vest pocket all the time—and I just came across it. Lottie's got such a temper she's liable to make things hot for me if she finds out. But she won't! I'll put the plaguey thing in the mail tonight."

Johnnie was suddenly aware of some one standing behind him. He turned with a guilty start. His worst apprehensions were realized. There stood Charlotte, her eyes fixed upon the incriminating letter.

"I lost it! I couldn't find it! I'll mail it tonight," cried Johnnie with the terror of the discovered criminal.

"Johnnie Ackerman, give me that letter," said Charlotte sternly.

"I won't," said Johnnie. "I'm going to mail it. It will get there just as soon as if I had mailed it yesterday. 'Won't make any difference—will it?'" And he jammed the letter in his pocket.

Charlotte took another tack. "Johnnie," said she with a propitiatory air. "I have changed my mind about that letter. I don't want it mailed. Come, I'll give you a dollar if you give it back to me."

"Oh, well, that's different," said Johnnie, and handed over the letter.

"And Johnnie," said Charlotte as she handed the boy his bribe, "let me give you a piece of advice which may be of use to you some day: Never write a letter while you are angry. Angry words spoken may be dissipated in the air; but the written word of anger is hard to recall."

"Sure," replied Johnnie. As Johnnie gazed alternately at the dollar in his hand and at the retreating form of his sister he muttered to himself: "Written word of anger! I believe she's gettin' nutty. But they are all of 'em that way when they are in love."

Fireless Cookers

It is impossible to say exactly where the principle of the fireless cooker originated. It was known to the Jews many centuries ago, who used bags of feathers for insulation. Sweden is reported to be the home of the hay box, which was the immediate predecessor of the modern fireless cooker.

Dogs That Don't Bark

The Siberian sledge dogs, which are reported to be very efficient in spite of the fact that many of them are on the verge of starvation from time to time, do not bark as do domesticated dogs. Signing the Constitution

Bancroft, the historian, says that "Eleven of the thirteen state delegations signed the proposed Constitution. Since the two other delegations had previously left the convention, the signing was unanimous. All perhaps had grave doubts about one feature or provision or another, but they had builded better than they knew, and they all had the courage to sign the concrete result of their arduous work."

DREYFUS IS NOW LIVING IN PEACE

"Bordereau" Case, Involving French Officer, Shook Nation Generation Ago.

Paris.—Twenty years have gone by since Alfred Dreyfus, condemned by a court-martial in Paris in December, 1894, to spend the rest of his life in Devil's island for alleged treason, resumed his place in civilized society, his rank in the army and his status as a free man innocent of the charge leveled against him.

Today Lieutenant Colonel Dreyfus, retired, wearing in his lapel the rosette of commander of the Legion of Honor, is living the quietest kind of a life in a sumptuous apartment in the Parc Monceau quarter with his wife, who stood by him when half of France was howling for his blood. He receives few visitors. "Tiger" Clemenceau, France's organizer of victory, is perhaps the last survivor of this courageous group who defended Dreyfus a generation ago.

Maitre Labori, the lawyer who acted as his counsel at the peril of his own life; Emile Zola, the novelist who went to prison for his part in the defense; Colonel Picquart, who risked his career for taking the part of the accused officer, and Juarez, the great Socialist orator who stirred the chamber of deputies and the country by impassioned appeals, are dead.

Stirred Whole Nation.

For twelve years this man stirred French passions to depths such as the country had not known since the revolution. The "affaire Dreyfus" dominated every aspect of public life. It caused governments to topple and made France almost a nullity in the political history of Europe. It led to a recrudescence of royalism which threatened the life of the republic. Political parties were divided and families were split. Several persons lost their lives in the almost daily clashes between the factions into which the nation was divided.

Previous to his arrest as a traitor Captain Dreyfus was merely an obscure staff officer, disliked in the army because he was a Jew. He was born in Mulhausen, in Alsace, in 1859 and was twelve years old when the armies of Kaiser Wilhelm's grandfather swooped down over the Rhine and incorporated Alsace and Lorraine in the newly born German empire. His parents sacrificed their patrimony rather than live under German rule. Young Alfred was just old enough to remember and was one of the many thousand Alsations who swore never to rest until the lost provinces were restored to France.

Nevertheless he was not popular in the military academy of St. Cyr, always because of his religion and race. "Bordereau" Comes to Light.

In the fall of 1894 a document, known later as the "Dreyfus bordereau" or memorandum, supposed to have been mysteriously stolen from the German embassy, was handed over to the French secret service and was delivered to the ministry of war. It purported to be a communication from a French staff officer offering important army secrets to a foreign power. Officials thought they saw an astonishing resemblance between the handwriting of the "bordereau" and that of Captain Dreyfus. So-called handwriting experts supported this view and Dreyfus was arrested.

His condemnation was a foregone conclusion. His enemies occupied the highest posts in the army and the government. By a unanimous verdict the court-martial condemned him to degradation and to detention for life in the penal settlement off the coast of South America known as Devil's island.

But powerful friends were working for him. Zola, in his famous letter. "J'Accuse," denounced the real culprits. The sentence was reduced to ten years by a second court-martial and President Loubet gave Dreyfus a free pardon.

Dreyfus, however, insisted that what he wanted was not a pardon but rehabilitation. A final session of the Appeal court decided in July, 1906, that he had been wrongly condemned. He was reinstated in the army, advanced to the rank of major and went through the war as such, retired after the armistice with the rank of lieutenant colonel and membership in the Legion of Honor.

Twins Who Look Alike Are Similar Mentally

Philadelphia.—The meaning of the phrase "as much alike as twins," has been tested so far as mentality goes on 158 pairs of twins in New York city. The tests, which were conducted at Columbia university by Gladys Tallman, were reported to the American Psychological association at its session here recently.

The mental ratings of the twins were compared with the mentality of brothers and sisters whose ages were one to four years apart.

Twins are about twice as much alike mentally as are brothers and sisters of different ages, the intelligence tests showed. Boy-girl twins are not so much alike as girl twins or boy twins. And twins of the same sex that look alike are more nearly the same mentally than those that look distinctly different. The twins studied by Miss Tallman included 63 pairs that looked so much alike that they were almost indistinguishable.

AMUSEMENTS

Directed by the man who made "Forsyth River," and "Born to the West" Paramount's current screen production, Zane Grey's "Man of the Forest" which comes to the Met theater Monday holds reliable promise of thrilling and satisfying entertainment.

Jack Holt, as Wilt Dale, hero of the story and Georgia Hale, leading woman, risked their lives in making the film to provide the sort of action required. Miss Hale's first venture into the strenuous western type of picture was made under a lucky star. People who have followed her work since she burst upon the film permanently in "The Gold Rush" and later in "The Rainmaker" are awaiting the new production with the greatest interest.

One of the play's big thrills is the kidnapping of a girl, in the course of which Holt, on his speedy horse, overhauls a racing buckboard and drags the struggling woman into his saddle.

A punch scene of the same spine-quivering order is provided when a mountain lion, pet of the "man of the forest" fights a gang of outlaws and rescues his master.

Thrilling horsemanship, stirring hand-to-hand encounters and convulsing comedy interlace the production. El Brendel, the screen's newest comedian, interprets the lighter moments.

Much of the picture was made in the most inaccessible parts of the Sierras, just below the perpetual snow line and scenic effects caught by the camera are actually breathtaking in their beauty.

John Walters directed the production. The cast includes Tom Kennedy, Warner Oland, Bruce Gordon and Duke Lee.

Necktie in Russia

People in the towns along the Volga paid extraordinary attention to my clothes. If I drank beer and wore no cravat the cost of living went down. Apples cost 2 kopecks and a droschky ride a ruble. People took me for a foreign political outcast living in Russia. They bade me welcome and waiters had the proletarian instinct to expect no tip. Shoeblocks were satisfied with 10 kopecks, and the peasants in the post office begged me to address their letters in a clear hand.

But how expensive it was when I wore a cravat! People called me Grafhdanin (burgher) and Gospodin (sir). German settlers said Herr Landsmann. Business men began to abuse the government. Coachmen expected a ruble for their fare. Waiters told me that they had gone to business school and were really intelligent men.—Frankfurter Zeitung (Living Age).

Not a Mechanical Ailment

Recently, a rather nervous young man entered a downtown typewriter establishment. When asked by the office girl what he desired, he replied, "There's something wrong with my typewriter, and I wish you would send some one over to fix it." The girl called the service manager who inquired as to what the trouble might be so the repair man would have an idea as to what to look for.

With an earnest look on his face, the young man replied, "I am not sure, sir, but it doesn't seem to spell right."

Will you say it just for the day or through the years to come?

NOW comes the time of year when the telltale stethoscope finds hearts more aflutter, when pulses beat with ardency renewed.

And no wonder! For just in the offing is St. Valentine's, the day set apart by the Saint of Hearts for all true lovers . . . filial, fraternal and romantic . . . to play the roles of Romeo and Juliet, or of Darby and Joan.

In such a crisis, adolescent youth seeks an outlet for his welling emotion in a bit of lacy paper, a red heart or two, a sugary quatrain or sonnet.

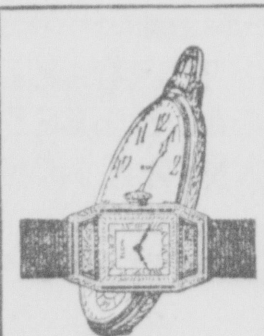

But we elderly folk, of twenty and beyond, must find a more lasting and worthy expression of our sentiment.

Fortunately, that's not hard to do. For just 'round the corner is a jeweler, and he deals in valentines of four dimensions . . . Beauty, Utility, Permanence and Value.

Valentines wrought of gold and silver or set with a precious jewel . . . valentines not necessarily expensive yet enduring, to be admired and cherished through the years.

Tokens that link the lovely with the lasting, the precious with the practical . . . a ring . . . a pin . . . perhaps a silver vase . . . or best of all, an Elgin watch.

A gift that will serve the minutes and the hours, and survive the decades. A gift, indeed, that will "say it for a lifetime."

There is no finer gift than an Elgin Watch. Featured in a wide style variety and sold at prices ranging from $15 to $175.00.

BRUNNER'S JEWELRY STOREHOPES TO DEVELOP
VEGETARIAN DOGS

London hears from Calcutta that a village has been purchased near Baroda by a Hindu millionaire and turned into a settlement for vegetarian dogs. It is called Kutta-Nagar, kutta being the Hindu word for dog and nagar for city. The millionaire belongs to a Hindu sect which absolutely discounts the killing of any living thing in any form, and he founded his dog-town in order to wean away fierce Indian canines from their instinct of killing. All the dogs in the settlement are fed on rice, wheat, milk and butter. No animal food whatever is given them. Puppies are fed on semolina liquefied by clarified butter mixed with sugar. On reaching three months of age they are given oiled and salted wheat bread. According to apparently authentic reports, the dogs are strong and healthy and the millionaire vegetarian hopes to breed a new type of dog in which the instinct for blood will have been eradicated. Mice are not allowed in the village.—Chicago Daily News.

Mauve Smart Shade Worn
With Evening Slippers

All light shades of gray and tan are popular in hosiery at present. Each shade has its own name and shades change monthly, it would seem. Among the less familiar shades are several new ones worth mentioning. For instance, "dust" is a medium dark tone of gray which appears like a shadow on the leg. "Rose-nude" is the shade which is being used for both gloves and hosiery. "Lilac-nude" is gray tinged with lavender and looks well with most gray frocks. A deep sun-burnt shade which makes the leg look as though the sun had tanned it, is chosen by the majority of well-dressed women. Nude stockings of pinkish cast are not favored by smart women this year.

For wear with the chartreuse green frock the grayish stockings tinged with chartreuse. Mauve is considered the smart shade for wear with gold or silver evening slippers.

Lavish Evening Wraps
Glitter With Crystals

Vivid colors, rich materials and the lavish use of fur are distinctive details of the mode for evening, as evidenced in wraps. It is a winter of great brilliancy in clothes. Frocks that glitter with crystals or gleam with the gold-and-silver lights of metal threads are worn beneath wraps of equal brilliancy.

Velvet in practically every instance is the fabric chosen, and for lining there are chiffons hand painted in exotic designs, or gold-and-silver lame. Where lame or metal brocade is used for the coat itself the lining is of velvet in a sharply contrasted color.

Occasionally velvet is used for both the outer part and the lining.

A color frequently chosen by youthful wearers is sapphire blue, which appears again and again in evening wraps bordered and collared with white fox. Emerald green and chin-chilla are combined in a superb wrap.

Higher Shoes Featured
in New Daytime Models

The latest shoe for day wear comes well up over the instep and many of the newer pumps extend upwards in tongue effect with a single button at the side. Single strap models continue popular for street wear as well as do the higher cut pumps.

Sandal effects and strapped models of elaborate type are stressed for evening wear. Jeweled heels and buckles adorn many models.

Black satin slippers with gold or silver heels and rhinestone strap buckles are new.

Heels of colored satin, particularly greens and reds, are used on brocade slippers, the heels matching the color of the gown.

Black Is Popular and
Not Sign of Mourning

Black is anything but a sign of mourning at present, at least in most cases. Some of the loveliest little dresses of the season are either plain black or black with white, black with gray or black with red. Black velvet, black satin, or black broadcloth are materials often utilized. The coat frock of black, with a colored waistcoat and a long, straight, black coat over it, lined with the same color as the waistcoat and trimmed with fur, form an ensemble often seen on the avenue.

Book Cloth Plaited for Shades

Very beautiful shades are made of the same cloth that is used in book binding. The shades, which complete large glass lamps, are plaited, with the lower edge cut in deep points. They are novel and exceptionally attractive.

IS INDUSTRY
SHIFTING?

To determine whether or not industry is shifting ground the Organization Service of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has undertaken an investigation designed to disclose the extent of such a migration for the year 1926.

No authoritative data are available on the number of industries which move, which start branches or which start de novo in any given year. Statements have been made that not more than 25 important industries move their plants annually, but for these there is no confirmation.

It is an accepted fact that industry is no longer rooted to the soil. The migration of the cotton industry southward and the shoe industry westward are illustrations, but how extensive this movement is, what the trends are and what the reasons for the changes are after all are only vaguely known. It is the hope of the Organization Service of the National Chamber that some light can be thrown upon this problem. Information is now being gathered, and will be published when compiled.—Today's Business.

Executions for Fraud

Increase in Soviet Russia
Moscow.—Executions for embezzlement, fraud and speculation in the conduct of government owned banks and commercial enterprises seem to be increasingly frequent, according to reports in the soviet newspapers. The severe penalty of death, reserved under the law for crimes judged dangerous to the security of the state, have been reported from small towns and communities. None have been recorded recently in the larger cities such as Moscow, Leningrad or Odessa.

J. S. Authority Sees Ample Motor Fuel for Long Future

HARRY H. HILL
© HARRIS & EWING

WORKERS IN GAS MASKS AT AN OIL WELL

MR. HILL'S IMPROMPTU SKETCH OF AN OIL DOME. The U. S. Bureau of Mines is confident that motor fuel supplies will be ample for many years to meet all needs of the country's millions of automobiles. Harry H. Hill, chief petroleum engineer of the Bureau, here tells the reasons for this conviction, and sketches the advances in industrial methods which justify his opinions.

By HARRY H. HILL

Chief Petroleum Engineer, United States Bureau of Mines.

ONE reason why there is no reason to worry greatly about motor fuel for a long time ahead is that people are worrying about it. Interest in such a question at the right time, is the best insurance against disaster. The President and the Federal Oil Corporation Board have done what was needed, at the right time.

We know that most petroleum has come from rather limited areas and that even from these only a small proportion has been taken out. Oil produced by gas pressure capable of lifting it to the surface when we drill holes is but a small proportion of all the oil contained in the sands. Even from the best pools recovery by the old methods is small, perhaps one-half in the most favorable conditions, oftener one-sixth, or one-seventh, or one-tenth. But a considerable part of what still remains in the ground can be recovered by methods now established as technically and economically practicable.

Producing oil from coal and shales and by mining the oil bearing sands is entirely possible. Experiments are going on in these directions, and if we ever have to fall back on these resources we will be ready. For a long time, however, the present methods of exploration and drilling, with improving processes to assure larger recoveries, are likely to suffice.

An Oil Dome Illustrated

I am no draughtsman, but maybe I can draw something that will help explain. Here's a rough drawing of an oil dome. The shaded part at the bottom is a deposit of oil bearing sands—with an impervious rock stratum above. A wild-catter drilled the hole A-B and gas pressure caused oil and gas to flow. After a while the gas pressure wasn't sufficient to keep up the flow and they pumped until ultimately even this ceased producing.

Nevertheless, most of the oil was still left sticking to the sand grains. Then the operator drilled the well C-D, which flowed for a time, but most of the oil was still down there in the sand. If the gas pressure could be restored more would flow. So the operator injects gas into one well, restoring the pressure and causing the oil to resume flowing from the other. After a time the flow will stop again, but still much of the oil will be left. In some fields it has been possible to obtain additional amounts of oil by introducing water in some of the wells and forcing the oil to others. The addition of a chemical such as soda ash to the water may assist in removing the oil from the sand grains, but neither plain water nor water containing chemicals should be introduced into an oil sand except as a last resort, for it is likely that the water, which travels faster through the sand, will get to the open wells ahead of the oil and when the flow is resumed under pressure water will come out.

Everything Saved Nowadays

The gas escaping from an oil well carries with it a proportion of gasoline, which in the old days was lost. Nowadays it is extracted from the gas and saved, while the dry gas can be forced back into the ground to maintain pressure.

One of the menaces to most oil pools is the inflow of subterranean water. Water flows through the oil sands faster than oil, and by surrounding the bottom of the well keeps the oil out. How to shut off the water and permit the oil to run out is a problem with which the engineers have long worked. They have made great progress and so increased recoveries.

In earlier times most oil producers carefully guarded all information about their wells and experiences, but latterly there is co-operation in these matters. Geologists and petroleum engineers, once derided by the "practical" oil men, are more and more accepted as guides and mentors. New knowledge is constantly increasing recoveries.

As to Mining for Oil

In Lorraine they have dug shafts down to the oil sands and actually brought the sands out, like coal from a mine. But it's costly.

Another mining process is to sink a shaft to the oil sands and from its bottom drive tunnels in all directions through the sands. From these tunnels small perforated pipes are driven into the sands, which drain the oil out of the sands. It flows to larger pipes back at the foot of the shaft and thence is pumped out. This requires installing an expensive plant, but in some fields the high recovery that is assured might justify the cost. I understand the process is about to be installed in a few fields in this country, some companies being convinced it is practicable and profitable.

Oil can be distilled from coal, and much work is now being done along this line. But more appeal has been made by the plan of extracting oil from shale. The shales of Scotland have been worked for three-quarters of a century, and they are almost unlimited in this country, richer in oil than those of Scotland. Kentucky, Ohio, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming and California are particularly rich in shales. It is just a question of the cost of extracting the oil. Congress has given $180,000, with which the Bureau has installed a plant near Rulison, Colorado, to distill oil from the Colorado River Shales. It is calculated that the shales mined at Rulison will produce about a barrel of oil to the ton.

The Use of Oil Shales

In Scotland they are working shales that produce about twenty-five gallons of oil per ton. The seams are from three-and-a-half to eight or ten feet thick. In Colorado are seams many times as thick and containing much more oil per ton. Reduction of shales involves an enormous mining operation, and after the oil is extracted the vast tonnage of refuse must be disposed of. So it is expensive compared with producing oil from wells.

Ben E. Lindsey of the Bureau of Mines Experiment Station at Bartlesville, Okla., is confident that exploration, better recoveries, better utilization and deeper drilling would furnish enough oil to meet all requirements for at least twenty-five to fifty years, if it could be extracted in that time. But as a practical matter this will not be possible. Within that period there will be times of shortage, when oil from shales will be needed to supplement the oil from wells, etc.

Meantime federal and state governments and the industry are co-operating in an astonishing range of investigations and studies. These activities cover such a wide field that even an enumeration of them would run into tiresome detail.

Well to Know Thyself

One of the chief elements in getting along with other people is to form an adequate opinion of your own capacities and just appreciation of your own limitations.—Albert E. Wiggam.

Bringing Dolly Home

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

"I WAS your idea, sending George to a co-educational college," observed Mrs. Gordon, still letting her gaze linger on the telegram. "Well, I don't think all the men at Welton university do that sort of thing. Just read that telegram over—will you?"

Laura Gordon, their eighteen-year-old daughter, reached for the telegram which she had not yet seen and did the rereading for her mother. "That's just what it says. 'Bringing Dolly Drum home for Easter holidays. Will arrive at 7 a. m., Thursday morning. Tell Laura to get up a dance.'"

"But they're taking a night train from Welton," said Mrs. Gordon. "Of course, they save time that way—but I can't imagine what Dolly's mother is thinking of."

"Maybe Dolly's mother doesn't know," suggested Mr. Gordon. "Anyway, I guess Dolly can look after herself."

Laura was too much engaged getting up the dance for the Monday after Easter to think much about Dolly. She arranged to have twelve girls and twelve men—since of course she would not have to provide a girl for George. Besides, thought Laura, she didn't want to invite every Tom, Dick and Harry. She invited only the boys who, she knew, would come in evening dress.

More curious than she realized as to the personality of George's new "girl friend," Laura volunteered to motor over to the station to meet the seven o'clock train Thursday morning.

The first person off the express train was George and then followed a very broad, very tall young man who made six-foot George seem half grown.

Laura rushed forward, received her brother's rough embrace and was about to ask, "Where's Dolly?" when her brother presented his companion. "This is my friend, Mr. John Drum," he said, adding proudly, "John Dollymore Drum. Dolly, this is my sister." "But where is Dolly?" asked Laura weakly, and then George explained. Of course he thought they'd know at home that Dolly was a man. Hadn't they heard of Dolly—the great Dolly—Dolly, the famous quarterback? Laura tried to make George and his companion believe that she knew him by reputation.

Interested as the Gordons were in their son's intimacy with the noted quarterback—of whom they had inadvertently never heard—there was a perceptible tone of disappointment in their welcome.

Laura, feeling that her brother's friend must be aware of this disappointment, tried to make amends. She talked with him and walked with him, sang for him and made candy for him until Dolly felt convinced that the whole world did not contain another girl so lovely and bewitching as Laura.

George looked forward eagerly to the dance and the pride he would feel in introducing his friend, the famous quarterback, Mr. John Dollymore Drum.

Monday morning Dolly followed Laura about the house as she garnered it for the great event and finally he had courage enough to tell her that he didn't think he would be present. For one thing he didn't dance and for another he had no evening clothes. All he did was play football and study at college. His father had no money to pay for such luxuries as tuxedos. Laura suggested that he rent a tuxedo for the occasion, but Dolly was sure that there would be none large enough for rent. She could teach him to dance that afternoon—and they could make some excuse about the clothes, she said.

Dolly smiled at Laura a wistful, happy smile that made her blush. He'd like to have her teach him to dance that afternoon—but he'd tell the truth about the clothes. Thereupon Laura laid down her duster and set the phonograph going, held out her slender young arms to Dolly and gave him his first lesson. Laura had much to do that afternoon—but always when there were a few minutes to spare she would call Dolly, who always seemed to be somewhere at hand, and give him one more lesson.

That evening Dolly stood the ordeal of being the only man present not clad in some sort of evening attire. The party went along amazingly well. That is, until it was time for the guests to depart. Someone wanted to say good-night to Laura, but Laura was not to be found. Neither was Dolly Drum. They were still missing when everyone had gone and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon and George stood perplexed in the dining room wondering whether they'd clear things away then or leave them till morning—wondering, more than they liked to say, what had become of Laura and Dolly.

But Dolly and Laura quietly walked in from the kitchen. They had been on a little walk, they said, and didn't realize how long they had been gone. Dolly looked down at Laura and Laura threw back an understanding glance.

"Yes, let's tell them," she said. And then, turning to George and her parents, she announced: "We're engaged. We couldn't help it."

"Well, I'm blessed," was what Mr. Gordon said, and then he reflected to himself that the Easter holidays had not been without some sort of thrill after all.

DODGE SEDAN CATCHES FIRE IN COLLISION

Fire Department Was Called After Wreck to Extinguish the Flames.

The fire department was called out Saturday morning at 5 o'clock by alarm 51, corner Court and Mill streets. An auto which had been in a collision was in flames, but the fire was extinguished and the auto saved from destruction.

The autos were a Ford runabout owned by Stanley Heskett, which was going west on Mill street and the other was a Dodge sedan, owned by W. Marlin Kinder, a salesman for the Charles Zimmerman Sons company, Columbus, who was going south on Court street. The Ford car was smashed up considerably. The Dodge sedan rolled over and its front axle was bent, the top stove in and the glass on one side of the car was broken. It was brought in by the Circleville Motors company for repairs.

"The Store that Treats You Right."

HONEST ABE LINCOLN!

Eons ago when Abe Lincoln clerked in the village store, a suspicious and sharp spinster was looking at sheets---

"Young Man," she said, as she placed the material in her mouth, "I want you to know that I am a judge of dry goods and I am asking you if this is pure, unadulterated linen?"

"Madam," replied the future President, "If you were any judge of merchandise or men you wouldn't have to ask, for the cloth you have been sampling isn't even pure cotton!"

The truth about merchandise that was good enough for Lincoln is still good enough for us.

Boos and Hisses Greet

Short Skirts in Lisbon

Lisbon, Portugal.—Portugal frowns upon the short skirt. Women who attempt to adopt the "up-to-the-knee" style have been subjected to popular manifestations.

Two young women of good family selling flowers and medals in the streets for a charitable institution wore short flimsy skirts which flattered in the wind as they accosted the passers by. But the boos of the market vendors, chiefly women, drove the girls from the street.

GRAIN-FED

Ewe Flock Produces the Best Lambs.

"The feed supplied to ewes during the pregnant and nursing period has a direct influence upon the flock returns for the year. Strong, vigorous lambs cannot be expected from ewes at weaning time, nor can the ewes be expected to furnish sufficient milk to promote maximum growth in their offspring if their ration is inferior as to kind and quality of feed or if an insufficient amount is allowed."

These statements by D. S. Bell, assistant in animal industry, are based on the results of a test made under his direction at the Ohio Experiment Station. In this test one lot of C-type Merino ewes were maintained until lambing time, February and March, on a ration of roughage only, consisting of heavy mixed clover hay and corn silage. After lambing, these ewes were allowed about three-fourths pound of a balanced grain mixture in addition to the roughage. They raised 78 per cent of the lambs born.

In another lot ewes of similar type and breeding received the same kind of roughage, but in addition were fed one-half pound of the grain mixture during the last six weeks of pregnancy. The grain was increased to one and one-fourth pounds after lambing. These ewes raised 90 per cent of their lambs.

The better fed ewes not only raised a larger percentage of the lambs weaned, but the lambs from this group averaged one-half pound heavier at birth and nearly five pounds heavier at weaning.

After reading about the reversible name of one Mr. Planalp, Harrah, J. Reynolds of Stonington, Conn., comes forward with his genealogy, wherein a dozen reversible names are disclosed. "My grandfather was Asa Reynolds. He married Hannah Wells. They had 12 children; all lived to get married. Their children's names were Hannah, Asa, Emme, Iri, Aziza, Anna, Zerez, Axa, Atta, Alila, Numan, Harrah. Harrah was my father."—Boston Globe.

Private Gas Well

E. C. Hamilton, who lives east of Independence, Mo., has earned a name as a resourceful fellow. He decided that a gas well would be a handy thing to have about his yard, so he went about 50 feet from his house and dug one. His well, which has a pressure of 475 pounds, has been cased and the gas is piped to Hamilton's house, being used for heating, cooking and lighting.

OVER 1000 OHIO

TEACHERS RETIRE

A Teacher's Average Length of Service is Between 30 and 35 Years.

Columbus, Feb. 10.—More than a thousand Ohio school teachers who have been retired during the six years the State Teachers' Retirement System has been in operation have realized $4,666,467.60 from their original investment of 4 per cent of their salaries.

The retirement system, as it is operated by the state, is in effect a savings bank for teachers. Each teacher pays into the fund 4 per cent of his salary each month, and receives it back with interest when age makes it impossible to continue teaching. If a teacher quits the profession and withdraws, his or her deposits are paid promptly with interest. Retirement allowances are paid in monthly checks, based on a percentage of the salary received by the teacher when active.

Twelve hundred and sixty-seven teachers have been retired during a half dozen years, 743 of them women, and 524 men, at an average of 64 years and 9 months. They had taught on an average 36 years and 9 months before retiring, drawing an average annual salary of $1,104.85 during the 10 years preceding retirement. Their retirement allowances average $50.07 per month. Up to August 31, 1926, 111 had died. During 1926, 201 were retired, 123 women and 78 men.

A teacher's average length of service is between 30 and 35 years. Some retired teachers in the State have upwards of 60 years service to their credit. Indications that teachers' salaries have increased recently may be found in the fact that the average salary, before retirement, of the 201 teachers retired in 1926 was $1,311.90 as compared to a little more than $1,100 annual average for the six-year period. Most of the women retired from city schools, and most of the men from country schools. There were 41 retirements from institutional schools.

WOMAN, 101,

GIVES PIPE CREDIT FOR LONGEVITY

Lancaster, Feb. 10.—"By the grace of God, and my old clay pipe, I have lived to be 101," was the statement made today by Mrs. Nancy Gamble, Fairfield County's oldest citizen, and the oldest civil war widow in Ohio.

Mrs. Gamble has spent her entire life here and her early playmates were Indian children.

She has smoked her pipe since youth. The diet prescribed by her for longevity consists of corn pone, mush and milk.

Mrs. Gamble has never ridden on a train or in an automobile, and never has seen a movie, but she would rather live in the present day, "because things are more comfortable and modern dress and bobbed hair are more sensible."

The centenarian reads without glasses and her hearing is almost perfect. She favors prohibition, but is not opposed to smoking.

Keeping Silage From Freezing Is Easy

First Thing to Do Is to Keep Silo Tight.

Many farmers who have trouble with silage freezing blame the trouble on the type of silo, but careful observers believe that there is no noticeable difference among silos as to freezing and that the trouble is due largely to the way the silo and silage are managed. How can freezing be prevented?

First of all, the silo must be kept tight, so that the air above the silage will act as a sort of insulation. The silo roof must be tight, the windows kept closed, the silo doors put back in place as the silage is fed down, only one or two doors being left open at the top of the silage, and these openings must be kept closed with heavy blankets or rugs or sacks of straw which can be pulled into place when leaving the silo. A cover over the bottom of the chute will also help.

Then the silage must be handled properly. It should be kept higher in the center and should be broken loose from the wall down two or three inches at the close of each feeding period. Two or three heavy rugs or blankets spread over the silage, especially around the walls, will help a great deal in preventing freezing from one period to the next. Any small amount of frozen silage pulled loose from the wall should be put at the center of the silo and covered with a rag or carpet or tarpaulin, and the natural heat from the silage will usually thaw it out before the next feeding period. It should be remembered that the large body of silage has quite a lot of heat and that freezing from the walls is not very deep or very severe so long as this heat is kept from escaping upward.

Artificial Light and Heat Good for Fowls

Artificial heat is the latest modern addition to poultry management that may prove successful. Authorities say practical poultrymen have kept up egg production during cold snaps by taking the chill off the air and preventing the drinking water from freezing.

Without lights the hens can only put in about half the time they have in the summer to consume feed. Artificial lighting methods have broken the long periods of idleness from darkness to daylight. Given more working hours, the hen has responded with a larger egg production for the year. The increase is obtained during the winter season when eggs are least plentiful.

An all-mash method of feeding poultry has been reported favorably. The dry feeds are all crushed or ground and mixed in proper proportions and fed in a hopper to which the hens have access.

Well Grown Pullets Are Best for Eggs in Winter

Winter egg production is largely obtained from the pullets that are well grown, properly fed and carrying a surplus of flesh. Old hens that have produced eggs for one laying year normally rest during the winter and start laying in February and March, advises D. C. Henderson, extension poultry specialist at South Dakota state college.

Mr. Henderson advises keeping a flock consisting of two-thirds pullets and one-third hens. The pullets should be forced for winter egg production through liberal mash feeding. The old hens should be allowed to rest during the winter and kept for the production of hatching eggs next spring.

Dormant Spray for Cherries

Sour cherries will not often require a dormant spray, but if needed the spray recommended for peaches may be used. The sprays are applied as follows, using lime-sulphur 1½ to 50 or bordeaux 3-4-50 plus one pound of arsenate of lead: Make the first spray just before the cherry trees bloom, the second when the shucks are dropping from the young fruit, and a third spray following the second in about two weeks. To control cherry leaf spot, about two additional sprays should be applied after harvest. The interval between them should be about three weeks.

New Japanese Pest

Indications of an entirely new American pest in New York and New Jersey have been received by the United States Department of Agriculture. The species is a scarab or beetle of Japanese origin, and is the third scarab that has been introduced from Japan. It is suggested that entomologists be on the lookout for it. Unlike the other two species which have been introduced, it is not of striking appearance. It is a small, brown scarab which superficially resembles a number of the species of the genus Serica.

Select Vigorous Males

In selecting males to be retained as breeders, vigor should be one of the primary considerations. The vigor of the male, as well as the female, will be reflected in the hatchability of the eggs and the livability of the chicks. Although early maturity should be sought for in the heavier breeds, it should not be emphasized to the detriment of size. Males which mature exceptionally early may be undersized individuals and not desirable for breeding.

SCIENTIST SAYS AMAZONS WERE MEN WITHOUT BEARDS

Declares Greeks Mistook Sex of Ancient Warriors on Account of Their Shaven Faces.

Philadelphia.—The centuries-old legend about the Amazons, a nation of female warriors who carried fire and sword to ancient Greece, Asia Minor, Arabia, Syria and Egypt, was declared a myth by Dr. J. L. Myres, secretary of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, who was here recently attending the meetings of the American association.

The Amazons, according to Doctor Myres, were not women at all but men who had shaved and consequently looked like women to the bearded Greeks, who first gave them a place in history.

Professor Myres declares careful study of recent archeological evidence clears up the mystery of the Amazons. Their shaven appearance, he adds, either led their foes to believe them women, or they were called women in contempt for the effeminacy of their appearance.

Archeologists, said Doctor Myres, have found representations of beardless men in the Hittite monuments on a plateau near the headwaters of the Sagarius river, the modern Sakaria, in Asia Minor. By deciphering the Hittite language it has been learned that these men actually participated in the wars against the Greeks when the Amazon legend originated.

At about 1250 B. C. the fashion for beardless men among the Hittites suddenly ended, the monuments show. Doctor Myres believes the Hittites decided a succession of defeats by bearded warriors of other nations was due to the fact that their faces were shaven and they decided to let their whiskers grow.

"Louis XVI Gelatinized," Schoolboy's Answer

London.—"Denmark is washed by the Catty Cat and the Scraggy Hack," wrote a despairing English boy at a geography examination. Other gems embalmed in the examination papers included:

"The highest peaks in the alps is the Blanc Mange."

"Amongst the islands of the West Indies are the Pyjamas, noted for toilet sponges."

"Ceylon is joined to India by a chain of coral wreaths."

"A focus is a thing like a mushroom, but if you eat it you will feel differently from a mushroom, for focuses is poison."

"Habeas Corpus is what the people use to say to the undertakers at the time of the great plague of London. It means, 'You may have the body.'"

"Louis XVI was gelatinized during the French revolution."

"Chaplets are small places of worship."

Wesley Great Horseman

The most redoubtable horseman of the Eighteenth century was John Wesley. All through his active life he rode from 60 to 70 miles a day; after he was eighty years of age his record for a year was from 4,000 to 5,000 miles. Often he was in the saddle by 3 a. m., and, when weather permitted, it was his custom to ride with loose rein, reading history the while. —A. M. Pagan, in the Empire Review.

Of Ancient Origin

Some authorities believe the origin of the term "Pig and Whistle" as applied to coffee houses to be a corruption of "Peg and Wassall." "Peg" is from the low German "pegel," meaning a measure of liquid capacity, such as was marked by pegs in a "peg tankard." "Wassall" is an old expression of good wishes, also the liquor used for drinking health.

Recently, a rather nervous young man entered a downtown typewriter establishment. With an earnest look on his face, the young man replied, "I am not sure, sir, but it doesn't seem to spell right."

And no wonder! For just in the offing is St. Valentine's, the day set apart by the Saint of Hearts for all true lovers . . . filial, fraternal and romantic . . . to play the roles of Romeo and Juliet, or of Darby and Joan.

In such a crisis, adolescent youth seeks an outlet for his swelling emotion in a bit of lacy paper, a red heart or two, a sugary quatrain or sonnet.

But we elderly folk, of twenty and beyond, must find a more lasting and worthy expression of our sentiment.

BRUNNER'S JEWELRY STOREHOPES TO DEVELOP
VEGETARIAN DOGS

London hears from Calcutta that a village has been purchased near Baroda by a Hindu millionaire and turned into a settlement for vegetarian dogs. It is called Kutta-Nagar, kutta being the Hindu word for dog and nagar for city. The millionaire belongs to a Hindu sect which absolutely discounts the killing of any living thing in any form, and he founded his dog-town in order to wean away fierce Indian canines from their instinct of killing. All the dogs in the settlement are fed on rice, wheat, milk and butter. No animal food whatever is given them. Puppies are fed on semolina liquefied by clarified butter mixed with sugar. On reaching three months of age they are given oiled and salted wheat bread. According to apparently authentic reports, the dogs are strong and healthy and the millionaire vegetarian hopes to breed a new type of dog in which the instinct for blood will have been eradicated. Mice are not allowed in the village.—Chicago Daily News.

Mauve Smart Shade Worn
With Evening Slippers

All light shades of gray and tan are popular in hosiery at present. Each shade has its own name and shades change monthly, it would seem. Among the less familiar shades are several new ones worth mentioning. For instance, "dust" is a medium dark tone of gray which appears like a shadow on the leg. "Rose-nude" is the shade which is being used for both gloves and hosiery. "Lilac-nude" is gray tinged with lavender and looks well with most gray frocks. A deep sun-burnt shade which makes the leg look as though the sun had tanned it, is chosen by the majority of well-dressed women. Nude stockings of pinkish cast are not favored by smart women this year.

For wear with the chartreuse green frock the grayish stockings tinged with chartreuse. Mauve is considered the smart shade for wear with gold or silver evening slippers.

Lavish Evening Wraps
Glitter With Crystals

Vivid colors, rich materials and the lavish use of fur are distinctive details of the mode for evening, as evidenced in wraps. It is a winter of great brilliancy in clothes. Frocks that glitter with crystals or gleam with the gold-and-silver lights of metal threads are worn beneath wraps of equal brilliancy.

Velvet in practically every instance is the fabric chosen, and for lining there are chiffons hand painted in exotic designs, or gold-and-silver lame. Where lame or metal brocade is used for the coat itself the lining is of velvet in a sharply contrasted color.

Occasionally velvet is used for both the outer part and the lining. A color frequently chosen by youthful wearers is supple blue, which appears again and again in evening wraps bordered and collared with white fox. Emerald green and chinchilla are combined in a superb wrap.

Higher Shoes Featured
in New Daytime Models

The latest shoe for day wear comes well up over the instep and many of the newer pumps extend upwards in tongue effect with a single button at the side. Single strap models continue popular for street wear as well as do the higher cut pumps.

Sandal effects and strapped models of elaborate type are stressed for evening wear. Jeweled heels and buckles adorn many models.

Black satin slippers with gold or silver heels and rhinestone strap buckles are new.

Heels of colored satin, particularly greens and reds, are used on broad-based slippers, the heels matching the color of the gown.

Black Is Popular and
Not Sign of Mourning

Black is anything but a sign of mourning at present, at least in most cases. Some of the loveliest little dresses of the season are either plain black or black with white, black with gray or black with red. Black velvet, black satin, or black broadcloth are materials often utilized. The coat frock of black, with a colored waistcoat and a long, straight, black coat over it, lined with the same color as the waistcoat and trimmed with fur, form an ensemble often seen on the avenue.

Book Cloth Plaited for Shades

Very beautiful shades are made of the same cloth that is used in book binding. The shades, which complete large glass lamps, are plaited, with the lower edge cut in deep points. They are novel and exceptionally attractive.

IS INDUSTRY
SHIFTING?

To determine whether or not industry is shifting ground the Organization Service of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has undertaken an investigation designed to disclose the extent of such a migration for the year 1926.

No authoritative data are available on the number of industries which move, which start branches or which start de novo in any given year. Statements have been made that not more than 25 important industries move their plants annually, but for these there is no confirmation.

It is an accepted fact that industry is no longer rooted to the soil. The migration of the cotton industry southward and the shoe industry westward are illustrations, but how extensive this movement is, what the trends are and what the reasons for the changes are after all are only vaguely known. It is the hope of the Organization Service of the National Chamber that some light can be thrown upon this problem. Information is now being gathered, and will be published when compiled.—Today's Business.

None have been recorded recently in the larger cities such as Moscow, Leningrad or Odessa.

Motor Fuel for Long Future

WORKERS IN GAS MASKS AT AN OIL WELL

MR. HILL'S IMPROMPTU SKETCH OF AN OIL DOME

The U. S. Bureau of Mines is confident that motor fuel supplies will be ample for many years to meet all needs of the country's millions of automobiles. Harry H. Hill, chief petroleum engineer of the Bureau, here tells the reasons for this conviction, and sketches the advances in industrial methods which justify his opinions.

By HARRY H. HILL

Chief Petroleum Engineer, United States Bureau of Mines.

ONE reason why there is no reason to worry greatly about motor fuel for a long time ahead is that people are worrying about it. Interest in such a question at the right time, is the best insurance against disaster. The President and the Federal Oil Corporation Board have done what was needed, at the right time.

We know that most petroleum has come from rather limited areas and that even from these only a small proportion has been taken out. Oil produced by gas pressure capable of lifting it to the surface when we drill holes is but a small proportion of all the oil contained in the sands. Even from the best pools recovery by the old methods is small, perhaps one-half in the most favorable conditions, oftener one-sixth, or one-seventh, or one-tenth. But a considerable part of what still remains in the ground can be recovered by methods now established as technically and economically practicable.

Producing oil from coal and shales and by mining the oil bearing sands is entirely possible. Experiments are going on in these directions, and if we ever have to fall back on these resources we will be ready. For a long time, however, the present methods of exploration and drilling, with improving processes to assure larger recoveries, are likely to suffice.

An Oil Dome Illustrated

I am no draughtsman, but maybe I can draw something that will help explain. Here's a rough drawing of an oil dome. The shaded part at the bottom is a deposit of oil bearing sands—with an impervious rock stratum above. A wild-catter drilled the hole A-B and gas pressure caused oil and gas to flow. After a while the gas pressure wasn't sufficient to keep up the flow and they pumped until ultimately even this ceased producing.

Nevertheless, most of the oil was still left sticking to the sand grains. Then the operator drilled the well C-D, which flowed for a time, but most of the oil was still down there in the sand. If the gas pressure could be restored more would flow. So the operator injects gas into one well, restoring the pressure and causing the oil to resume flowing from the other. After a time the flow will stop again, but still much of the oil will be left. In some fields it has been possible to obtain additional amounts of oil by introducing water in some of the wells and forcing the oil to others. The addition of a chemical such as soda ash to the water may assist in removing the oil from the sand grains, but neither plain water nor water containing chemicals should be introduced into an oil sand except as a last resort, for it is likely that the water, which travels faster through the sand, will get to the open wells ahead of the oil and when the flow is resumed under pressure water will come out.

Everything Saved Nowadays

The gas escaping from an oil well carries with it a proportion of gasoline, which in the old days was lost. Nowadays it is extracted from the gas and saved, while the dry gas can be forced back into the ground to maintain pressure.

One of the menaces to most oil pools is the inflow of subterranean water. Water flows through the oil sands faster than oil, and by surrounding the bottom of the well keeps the oil out. How to shut off the water and permit the oil to run out is a problem with which the engineers have long worked. They have made great progress and so increased recoveries.

In earlier times most oil producers carefully guarded all information about their wells and experiences, but latterly there is co-operation in these matters. Geologists and petroleum engineers, once derided by the "practical" oil men, are more and more accepted as guides and mentors. New knowledge is constantly increasing recoveries.

As to Mining for Oil

In Lorraine they have dug shafts down to the oil sands and actually brought the sands out, like coal from a mine. But it's costly.

Another mining process is to sink a shaft to the oil sands and from its bottom drive tunnels in all directions through the sands. From these tunnels small perforated pipes are driven into the sands, which drain the oil out of the sands. It flows to larger pipes back at the foot of the shaft and thence is pumped out. This requires installing an expensive plant, but in some fields the high recovery that is assured might justify the cost. I understand the process is about to be installed in a few fields in this country, some companies being convinced it is practicable and profitable.

Oil can be distilled from coal, and much work is now being done along this line. But more appeal has been made by the plan of extracting oil from shale. The shales of Scotland have been worked for three-quarters of a century, and they are almost unlimited in this country, richer in oil than those of Scotland. Kentucky, Ohio, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming and California are particularly rich in shales. It is just a question of the cost of extracting the oil. Congress has given $180,000, with which the Bureau has installed a plant near Rullison, Colorado, to distill oil from the Colorado River Shales. It is calculated that the shales mined at Rullison will produce about a barrel of oil to the ton.

The Use of Oil Shales

In Scotland they are working shales that produce about twenty-five gallons of oil per ton. The seams are from three-and-a-half to eight or ten feet thick. In Colorado are seams many times as thick and containing much more oil per ton. Reduction of shales involves an enormous mining operation, and after the oil is extracted the vast tonnage of refuse must be disposed of. So it is expensive compared with producing oil from wells.

Ben E. Lindsey of the Bureau of Mines Experiment Station at Bartlesville, Okla., is confident that exploration, better recoveries, better utilization and deeper drilling would furnish enough oil to meet all requirements for at least twenty-five to fifty years, if it could be extracted in that time. But as a practical matter this will not be possible. Within that period there will be times of shortage, when oil from shales will be needed to supplement the oil from wells, etc.

Meantime federal and state governments and the industry are co-operating in an astonishing range of investigations and studies. These activities cover such a wide field that even an enumeration of them would run into tiresome detail.

De Laval Oil

Don't experiment with various kinds of oil to lubricate your De Laval Separator. There is just one brand of oil which is exactly suited to the purpose, and hundreds of brands which will not do at all.

Keep the oil cup of your separator filled with De Laval oil and you will get the utmost in separator satisfaction. The machine will turn easier, and give longer and better service.

All light, high-speed machines run better when lubricated with De Laval oil. It gives them the protection they need and is, therefore, the cheapest oil in the end.

The MASTERPIECE of the Oldest Washer Manufacturer

NEARLY fifty years of experimenting and study, backed by unlimited resources, have produced this Model E-25 (Electric) Voss Floto-Plane Washer—and a new era in home laundering.

20% added efficiency is the result of this "Thorough Cleansing with a Light Touch." The dirt is out, but all the wear is left in.

Model E-25 Electric—compactly built, with mechanism enclosed. Heavy, self-draining copper tub—one-piece cast-aluminum lid. Four-position self-locking wringer with 12-inch cushion rolls. Easily controlled. Special motor—simple flatbelt drive—cut-2 time. Folding bench.

The Floto-Plane Agitator takes advantage of the tendency of clothes to rise close to surface of water. At this point it functions—where suds are thickest—with no roughing of clothes. It is the water-level agitator that makes washing easier on clothes, gets them cleaner, in less time. Come in and let us demonstrate this amazing washer to you.
